How do i make extra money from home

Photo Courtesy: Dougal Waters/DigitalVision/Getty Images Earning extra money can help you out in so many ways. One of the biggest benefits is that it can create some extra wiggle room in your budget and also make saving up easier. But not everyone has the time or desire for a second job — and that’s where a home-based side gig comes in. There are many ways you can make money from home, and it’s easy to supplement your income with a few hours of work that you set aside a little extra time to do every week. Working from home isn’t just for making a little extra money, either. You can even turn working from home into a career if you take some extra steps to build up your business over time. Whether you’re looking to start down a fresh career path or put some extra money in your pocket, you can do so from home. These are some of the best ways to get started.Writing, Editing and Proofreading Are Easy Anywhere You Have a ComputerIf you have a way with the written word, you can earn money by writing online. Opportunities for writing income abound, from articles to e-books to paid blogging jobs. If you’re interested in this sort of position, it helps to have a strong command of English grammar and of different writing stylebooks and their formatting requirements. However, if you’re fluent in other languages you can also pick up jobs translating content from one language to another. These types of jobs also involve negotiating with the clients who need your writing services, so it’s essential that you have effective communication skills and can respond quickly to emails and requests from those clients. Because you can do this type of work from just about any computer, it can be a great way to make money not just at home, but also anywhere in the world. Photo Courtesy: @WritersDigest/Twitter You can also earn money proofreading or editing other writers’ work. You can even bring speeches and videos to the page as a transcriber. As with writing, these positions do require strong language skills, but the convenience alone can make the job worth it. Although you’ll likely have deadlines, you can do this type of work just about whenever you have time.To find these types of jobs, consider looking at an online marketplace like Upwork. You can find client listings for different projects you might be interested in, and these online systems make it easy for you to contact potential clients, place bids on work and get paid regularly. These sites also allow clients and freelancers to rate each other based on how well the transaction went. After a while, you can build up your reputation and add examples to your profile to serve as a portfolio of sorts. This makes it easier to get work in the future and can even help you transition into a full-time career as an online writer.Crafts and Design Help You Monetize Your HobbiesIf you love crafting as a hobby, creating works of art that people might pay to display in their homes or designing clothes that people want to wear, you can turn those skills into income. If you love thrifting and finding unique vintage items, you can even turn that hobby into income by selling your interesting finds in an online shop. Online marketplaces like Etsy allow designers and craftspeople to sell items they design and make themselves, and the market audience you can reach is potentially huge — people from all over the world shop on Etsy and similar sites. Photo Courtesy: Thurteil/E+/Getty Images The ability to budget money — you want to make more in profits than you pay for new supplies to keep making your items — and promote yourself online will both come in handy if you’re interested in selling your homemade items online. You’ll also want to make sure you have well-written product descriptions and captivating photography that showcases what you’re selling in an enticing way. Be prepared, too, to respond to customer questions and other communications in a timely manner. The nice thing is, however, that you can make work like this a side job or your main source of income depending on how much time you’re able to commit to it.Virtual Assistant Work Harnesses Your Organizational SkillsYou can take your knack for organization or willingness to help others and turn it into work as a virtual assistant. Often, corporations and even small businesses are willing to pay remote workers to serve as executive assistants without having to pay for the overhead of extra office space. Virtual assistant work encompasses traditional clerical work, such as setting up meetings and answering emails, but it also can include putting presentations together for meetings, creating reports and maintaining a social media presence. The best thing about all of these tasks is that you can do them from the comfort of your home on your computer. Photo Courtesy: Westend61/Getty Images One thing you’ll want to keep in mind with this sort of job is that many potential clients out there may be looking for someone to do this full-time or during the day when they’re also working. If you work a traditional 9-to-5 job, this could interfere with your schedule somewhat. If you’re looking for a position that’s more flexible, aim for a job that lets you focus on social media management, which isn’t always as time-bound. If you’re looking to make a career switch, on the other hand, going full-time as a remote office manager or virtual assistant could be the role for you.Teaching and Tutoring Help Learners of All AgesThere’s a growing market for online tutors and teachers, and you can take advantage of these opportunities to add money to your bank account. With a college degree in any field, you can sign up with companies like VIPKid that pair English language students with native English speakers, or you can supplement the education of home-schooled students in the United States and elsewhere. If you have an advanced degree, you can even teach online courses. Photo Courtesy: Rishigangoly/Pixabay Tutoring often has lower degree requirements than teaching and can be great if you prefer working one-on-one with students. Online teaching and tutoring give you the flexibility to set your own schedule and work as much or as little as you like. Keep in mind, though, that you may need to do much of this work during the day, depending on when students are most likely to need help. If you work with learners in different time zones, however, this may give you more flexibility by making it easier to work at night after you’ve gotten home from your full-time job.Micro-Task Marketplaces Offer On-the-Go Earning OpportunitiesIf you’re looking to earn some extra cash but don’t want to commit to another job and prefer to keep your schedule open, micro-tasking can provide some extra padding for your wallet. Websites like Amazon’s Mechanical Turk allow you to complete a range of short, easy tasks for small amounts of money. From transcribing text to performing data entry to even participating in university studies and surveys remotely, micro-tasking is quick, easy to do and rarely comes with any special requirements aside from a computer and an internet connection. Photo Courtesy: Westend61/Getty Images The downside of this sort of work is that it usually doesn’t pay as much as the other jobs on this list — sometimes only a few cents per task, depending on what you’re working on. So, you’ll need a keen eye for worthwhile tasks and the ability to manage your own time. With no supervisors and no schedule, however, that could be a fair tradeoff based on your needs. MORE FROM ASKMONEY.COM Want to make money without leaving home during the coronavirus pandemic? Or do you want to figure out ways to make money online so that you can fund your travels when coronavirus subsides? (Note that the following article was published in 2020; to see the latest version of this story with even more exciting ways to earn money, go to How To Make Money Online In 2021: 21 Easy Ideas.) International Living—a website dedicated to helping people live and travel abroad—has issued an insightful report on 50 ways to make money in retirement. The report is aimed at retirees who want to fund their lives overseas, but here’s the secret gem: Hidden between the advice on opening a gallery, becoming a tour guide or joining the craft beer revolution, you’ll find smart advice that anyone can use to make money online. “No matter your skill set, no matter what you do now or did in the past, there is an option that will align with your own skills and passions,” the InternationalLiving.com editors explain. According to Jennifer Stevens, executive editor at International Living, the list is vast, but it isn’t comprehensive. “We created it to give people a sense for the scope of opportunity out there,” says Stevens. “We’ve written lots about the different ways expats abroad fund their lives. Sometimes it’s with online work—like writing or drop-shipping. Sometimes it’s in-person services they provide, from running a consignment store to wedding planning. Certainly, the online opportunities provide great flexibility and portability. But it’s worth pointing out that business owners in many places tell us that it’s much easier to start a business abroad because it’s often less expensive and less bureaucratic than it is at home.” It’s possible to make money online to work at home—or use these skills to eventually travel the ... [+ ] world. Getty Though it might seem like an unusual time to start a new career, Jeff Opdyke—the Prague-based editor of The Savvy Retiree and contributor to International Living—says that “it’s up to us to learn how to take back control of our own lives, of our lifestyles and our personal happiness.” Opdyke also points out that for all the damage coronavirus has wrought and all the damage still to come, it might have some positive outcomes when it comes to the work world. “What this crisis is demonstrating is the capacity for so many workers to untether themselves from cubicles and work from home—or wherever,” he says. “In the cold, corporate calculus of a post-corona world, I think we’re going to see an increasing number of visionary companies realize that there are vast cost savings to be had in letting workers work from wherever. There’s no need to pay the costs of running a cubicle farm when workers already have places they can work—their home, a coffee shop, wherever. And I think we will see increased productivity from this because workers will be motivated.” So the lesson here is that while you might be working from home now, this might eventually translate into living and working abroad—and living the dream. Opdyke’s advice? “Be as productive as you possibly can. Be over-productive. Step up your game so that when all of this over, you have some potential leverage to talk to your bosses about trying a work-at-home life. That’s assuming, of course, you like your work-at-home life. Not everyone will. But if you feel the freedom those of us working remotely feel, then now, amid this crisis, is a great opportunity for you to shine so that bosses take note.” So whether you’re looking to live in a foreign country some day, just want to work from home in the current coronavirus environment or want to restructure your career to be able to work remotely forever, read on for 17 ways you can make money online. It’s valuable information to have during this current economic crisis—and beyond. After that, we’ve got three creative money-making ideas from the International Living list that we dream about doing when the world gets back to normal. Photography can help you fuel your career right now. Getty 1. Sell Your Photos Do you have photo skills or live in an area where images are in demand? “Stock photography websites are huge repositories of photographs, covering almost every possible subject you could imagine,” advises International Living. So how does it work? Photographers can upload their images to any one of a number of huge databases, allowing magazine editors, designers or any organization with a website to buy them. And the beauty of stock websites: Photos can be sold any number of times—so you can continue to make money without any effort. Photography sites to check out include Shutterstock, Photoshelter and Getty Images. 2. Create How-To Videos “In recent years, YouTube has grown into the go-to source for all manner of video courses and guides,” says International Living. “Instructors can monetize their videos by charging a subscription fee or password protecting content for paying customers only.” This article shares some tips from one real estate agent who made $100,000 in one month on YouTube. Another piece of advice from International Living: Get to know the phrases that people search for. To find potential search phrases, start typing “how to [your topic]” into YouTube’s search bar and notice what phrases are generated in the auto-fill dropdown. Make sure to use the same keywords when you write your video title, description, and tags. 3. Become a Copywriter Want to earn a great income no matter where you live—a house by the sea in Latin America, an historic European city or even on a Greek island? Copywriting could be ideal for you. According to International Living, “copywriting is a mega-industry, ripe with opportunity. And yearning for people who can fuel it with fresh marketing messages and one of the best benefits of the freelance copywriter’s lifestyle is that you can get paid in U.S. dollars...yet live virtually anywhere in the world.” Express Writers has tips on how to become a copywriter and is also a resource for jobs. You can teach English anywhere or online. Getty 4. Teach English “If you’re a native English speaker, you may not realize it, but you already have the number one qualification you need for a fun, portable income that can hand you a steady paycheck from anywhere in the world,” says International Living. Some resources include GoOverseas.com, TeachAway (teach English online to Chinese students), iTutorGroup (teach English online to Taiwanese children and adults) and English Hunt (teach English on the phone to adult students in Korea) 5. Turn Your Interests Into a Podcast That Pays “Podcasting doesn’t have to be complicated,” says International Living. With a microphone, laptop and free recording software, you’ll be up and running. Plus, podcasts don’t need to run every day (once a week is best) and are better when they’re short. There are a number of ways to make money from a podcast. The most obvious is commercial sponsorship, but you can also use it as a platform to advertise your own products or services. NPR has a great guide to launching a podcast here. 6. Set up a Content and Web Development Business Do you know how to do web and content development? You can offer these services to anyone via online tools that make developing beautiful websites a snap. Some resources include WordPress, Weebly and Joomla. With translation, you can work from home or anywhere. Getty 7. Become a Translator and Interpreter Do you speak another language? Anywhere you find expat communities—and where English is not the first language—you’ll find a need for interpreting and translation services. You can also do translation and interpretation online. You’ll find a number of resources for being a translator or an interpreter here: one of the best is WeLocalize, which ranked at the top of this list of the top 20 companies for remote jobs in 2020. 8. Try Drop-shipping Have you heard of drop-shipping? It’s a method of retail where the seller doesn’t actually have a physical inventory. Instead, when a customer makes an order, you purchase the item from a third party, and they ship it directly to the customer. “This means you’ll never have to fork over a single dime to store your products or maintain your inventory,” advises International Living. “And you’ll never have to buy products in bulk, hoping to sell enough to recoup your investment.” This method can be done with online selling platforms like eBay or Amazon. You can find out more about drop-shipping in this helpful article from Shopify. 9. Tutor “Establishing your own tutoring service can be a lucrative business that provides you with a comfortable and flexible lifestyle,” advises International Living. “The best part of all, you can set up a tutoring business in almost any country in the world.” A tip: Offer discounts to clients who promote your business. “Word-of-mouth marketing is still one of the most valuable marketing tools you can have when starting out,” advises International Living. The site Tutors.com has a list of the best online tutoring jobs, and you can also apply to be a tutor at Tutorme.com. 10. Become a Freelance Proofreader Proofreading is another lucrative online career. “Most agencies will pay around 25% of the price of a translated document to a proofreader,” advises International Living. “Agencies charge about $75 for the translation of a five-page standard business document. So proofing the same document—which takes about an hour—pays out about $18 to $20.” You can work full time, part-time or around-the-clock. Mediabistro—a site that offers resources for media professionals—has tips on how to become a proofreader. Are you a fast typist? Consider being a transcriber. Getty 11. Type for Cash Are you a fast typist? Transcribing is simple: Listen to an audio file through headphones and type it out. “As a transcriber, your pay is directly related to how fast you type,” advises International Living. “Transcription jobs are paid by the audio hour (the length of the audio file), rather than by the hour worked. The time spent on a transcript is influenced by the audio quality, background noise, the accent of the speaker and the speed at which people speak.” The average transcriber—typing between 75 and 100 words per minute—will complete one audio hour in four hours worked. Consider the company Rev.com, which hires freelance transcribers. 12. Create a Money-Making Blog Do you have an area of expertise? Share your advice on a blog. If travel is your area of expertise, think about what you have to offer. Are you an expert in luxury travel or budget travel? Can you share advice about certain activities like hiking or shopping? “The more specific you get, the easier it’ll be to attract an engaged audience and to earn money with your site,” advises International Living. The sites Squarespace and Wix have tips on how to create blogs and can also host them. 13. Tap Into the E-Book Business The e-book business is a great way to earn money. You can create your own (Kindle has a guide for how to do it). Or find a book that’s already been published in print and license it to publish online. You can pay the author 8-15% royalties based on net sales or a one-time payment for the online publishing rights. 14. Set up an Online Course Or go beyond writing an e-book and create a whole online course with tutorials, PDF downloads and videos. It’s a great way to create passive income because people will pay for the info and can go at their own pace or post questions related to the course in a dedicated group. Here’s one resource for creating and selling online courses: LearnWorlds, which makes it possible for anyone to profit from their knowledge and experience by creating an online program. Life coaching can be done online. Getty 15. Become a Life Coach (or Even a Travel Coach) “Life coaching is a thought-provoking and creative process that helps people focus on both personal and professional goals,” advises International Living. “People use life coaching to overcome fears, boost their self-confidence, create goals and instill success-oriented habits.” You can find thousands of online training programs on how to be a life coach, and many certification programs offer an entire website setup once training is completed. If travel is your area of expertise, you can even become a travel coach. Read this story about a travel writer who became a travel coach. 16. Become an Audiobook Narrator Audiobooks are an increasingly popular form of entertainment. The convenience factor of smartphones has led to an industry boom,” advises International Living. “That’s creating a demand for freelance narrators.” This site has advice on learning how to become an audiobook narrator. 17. Internet Research and Surveys Another way to make good money is by surfing the Internet in your spare time or filling out online surveys. “If you’re looking for a way to make an extra $1,000, $2,000 a month part-time—then Internet research is for you,” advises International Living. Add the site Qmee to your browser, and if you click on a search result, you’ll earn money. You can also earn cash for taking Qmee surveys and sharing your opinions on brands. Other survey sites include SurveyBods, Survey Junkie and Valued Opinions. Another way to make a series of small cash rewards while on the go? With the new app Current, travelers can make up to an extra $600 a year by simply listening to music and performing various tasks. A travel job we dream about: farming and living off the land. Getty Plus. 3 Travel Jobs that We Dream About 1. Farming and Living Off the Land “Farming can be one of the most fulfilling lifestyles you can embark on,” advises International Living. “But many might dismiss it as too much hard work, or too expensive to get started.” That may be true in the US, but overseas there are opportunities that will make it easier than you think to live off the land—and you can make money while you’re at it. It could be as simple as creating a veggie patch to feed the family and bring in a little extra cash at the local farmers’ market. Or you could oversee a large acreage of land that turns out big profits. 2. Run an Ecodge “In countries all around the world, expats have discovered the joys—and profit—of running an ecodge,” advises International Living. “They’re taking advantage of a growing trend in ecotourism to fund their peaceful, nature-filled lives overseas—and they’ve discovered some of the most affordable, breathtaking destinations to do it. Ecologes are usually located in destinations that cater to tourists looking for nature-focused vacations and can be set up anywhere that is reachable by transport. 3. Try Cheesemaking Who doesn’t love cheese? “Cheesemaking can be a satisfying and fun hobby, but beyond that, it can provide an income as well,” advises International Living. “In certain expat havens in Latin America, good cheese is in high demand.” READ MORE • These Beautiful Villages In Italy Will Pay You $33,000 To Move There • The Best (And Cheapest) Places To Live In America In 2021
